Capitol Club Connects With Students at STEM for Her Day

Members of the AOC’s Capitol Club Chapter met with more than 350 female high school students November 20 at STEM for Her Day at American University Washington College of Law.

The event brought together students from the Washington area for hands-on activities, panels, career exploration, and networking with industry professionals.

Capitol Club President Laura Sunden and Young Crows Social Outreach Chair Devlin Cassidy staffed a chapter booth. They talked with students about careers in electromagnetic warfare and in cyber and related defense and technology fields.

They also told students how to join the Capitol Club, connect with the Young Crows program, and learn about scholarships and events.

The booth gave students a first look at specialized STEM careers and showed them how to get involved with AOC in the National Capital Region.